What is WRAP Certification?

Worldwide Responsible Accredited Production (WRAP), formerly Worldwide Responsible Apparel Production, is an independent, objective, non-profit team of global social compliance experts dedicated to promoting safe, lawful, humane and ethical manufacturing around the world through certification and education. The WRAP certification program mainly focuses on the apparel, footwear and sewn products sectors.

Wrap Certification principles are generally based on the workplace regulation and local laws. This is the world's largest factory based certification program for textile & footwear industries. A WRAP certification audit will inspect your entire production process to ensure you are compliant with the WRAP audit Principles and provides your customers assurance that your goods are ethically produced also demonstrates commitment towards socially and environmentally ethical standards and represents responsible production.

WRAP audit also administers a comprehensive training program, which has become one of the leaders in the industry. They provide training program like Internal Auditor, Fire Safety & C-TPAT for anybody who wants and Lead Auditor Course training only for accredited monitoring partners.

How long does it take to get WRAP certified?

- It is dependent on the facility's readiness at the time of application. From the time an application is made for a certificate to be granted, it can take as little as six weeks, but it might take anywhere from two to six months, or even longer in rare cases.

A certain brand claims to be WRAP Certified. Is it True?

- No, WRAP certification is not available to brands or stores. Individual production units are the only ones that can be.

Is Nike WRAP certified?

- If a company wants to sell to buyers and retailers in the United States, it needs to get the WRAP certification. Even though they have their own certification and compliance procedures, retailers such as GAP, Nike, and Walmart frequently request that producers have a valid WRAP certification.

How do I know if my clothes were made in a WRAP certified facility?

Clothing and footwear supply chains are vast and complicated, making it difficult to label any of them as being created wholly in WRAP-certified facilities. While the final assembly of a garment may have occurred in a WRAP-certified facility, the cloth, buttons, or other components may have been manufactured in a non-WRAP-certified site. We do not have a system for identifying clothing and footwear created in our accredited facilities because WRAP is not a consumer-facing company. Several companies and retailers, on the other hand, have chosen to state whether they source from WRAP-certified facilities on their websites.
